CUSTOM® BUILDING PRODUCTS ARCHITECTURAL CONSULTANT WINS THE CONSTRUCTION SPECIFIER ARTICLE OF THE YEAR AWARD

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. – Oct. 23, 2017 – Howard Jancy, a commercial architectural consultant for Custom® Building Products, recently won The Construction Specifier Article of the Year Award. The annual honor given by the Construction Specifications Institute (CSI) recognizes exemplary editorial contributions by a member to its official magazine, The Construction Specifier. Jancy's article, "For the Want of a Horseshoe Nail: Identifying Causes of Tile Failure," uses a case study to reinforce the importance of starting a project with accurate specifications to avoid problems later.

Jancy, CSI, CDT, has 30 years of experience with tile, stone, and concrete flooring, as well as paving design, installation, and remediation. His responsibilities as a CUSTOM® consultant include specification writing and review, technical service, and continuing education. In addition to The Construction Specifier, Jancy has contributed articles to other industry publications like Landscape Contractor National and the Journal of Architectural Coatings.
